“ Every evening for some years, mom (Kitty) talked to Georgie, and every morning we'd ask, "What did Georgie have to say?" There was always a dog story concerning whichever pet she had at the time. . . and the stories were all entertaining: Calliope and Calamity dragging their dinner dishes into the living room to eat with Georgie while they all watched TV. Zack running around the TV to see where the cattle went when they stampeded off the screen. Her last dog, whose name escapes me, didn't always want to eat dog food, and spent a lot of time one day trying to hide his food dish under his dog bed, and then climbed up on his bed, on top of it all, to survey his world. Many times I've wished we had written the stories down as they happened - they would have made a good book!
