In lieu of flowers, please provide someone with a smile.

Flowers fade with time but who knows how a smile may grow.

Tip large or lend a hand, the best seed to plant is in the hearts that we know.

Remember those who have gone on before by giving that small gift of a smile – paying forward means more through easing burdens awhile.

Goodbye, Thank You, and I Love You Mom

Goodbye Mom, it sucks letting go. I am sure someday the sadness will slow.

Drifting through memories will help us to heal but right now it is hard knowing we are at life's final deal. We will miss playing games and gathering together.

Christmas, Easter, Thanksgiving, Birthdays and more now have changed forever.

Thank you, mom, but those words don't express all the blessings you given and the lessons you've taught. You picked us up when we hurt and straightened us up when we fought. You got us to church and made clear right from wrong. You gave us a home and family in which to belong. You sheltered and pushed when we needed both. In doing all those little things you insured your kid's growth.

I love you mom, today it seems like I didn't say that enough to you. I hope that even though the words sometimes failed me that you always knew. Give Dad a hug for me 'cause I miss him so much, I envy that you get his embrace and his touch. Hopefully, one day we will be together again, and forever together we all will remain.

Go be with Dad – we will all be ok – things will ease up a bit day after day. You showed us how to be strong, and how to grow through our grief, you have climbed all your mountains now go rest in peace. We all will remember, and our love will not end, so goodbye, thank you and love to you Mom as our heart's they will mend.
